“Integrating ePedagogy into the Social Studies Classroom”

The below excerpt is taken from Enabling e-Learning
<http://elearning.tki.org.nz/Teaching/Curriculum-areas/Social-sciences>

Four mechanisms that facilitate effective learning

Effective pedagogy in social sciences/Tikanga ā iwi best evidence synthesis (BES) identifies four mechanisms that facilitate learning for diverse students in social sciences.

Each of these BES mechanisms provides a lens to examine current practice. Each is backed by evidence to inform what to do next.

1. Connection – make connections to students’ lives.
2. Alignment – align experiences to important outcomes.
3. Community – build and sustain a learning community.
4. Interest – design experiences that interest students.

- In what ways are you using e-learning to embed the BES mechanisms into your social sciences programme?
- How are you ensuring that the ICTs you use suits the diverse learners in your school context?

Come along to our afternoon PLD session to join in this discussion. Learn from Social Science Colleagues how they have been trying to use eTools/e-Learning/ePedagogy to enhance the four mechanisms of effective learning in a Social Science classroom. Discover great tools for your classroom
